

TOO MUCH SPEED IN FOG BLAMED FOR WRECK

Commerce Board Report Says Train Crash in Which 27 Were Killed in Ohio Might Have Been Averted.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—Too much speed in foggy weather is blamed for the wreck at Amherst, O., March 29, which resulted in the death of twenty-seven persons and injury of forty-seven, in a report made by Chief Beinaup of the Safety Division of the Interstate Commerce Commission to-day.

"If Engineer Hess—in charge of the engine which ran into the stalled train—'had been running his train at reduced speed, as is contemplated by the rule of safety, instead of running at normal speed, and even making up time, in all probability he would have been able to read the signal indications properly, and this accident would have been averted," Beinaup reported.

The report recommends that in foggy, stormy weather, when signals are hard to read, positive instructions be given by railroads prohibiting running at high speed. Unless this is done, the report says, such accidents will continue. Another recommendation is that a flagman, sent back from a stalled train to warn approaching trains should not be recalled to his train at all, but left on the scene to attend to warnings. The fact that a flagman was recalled at Amherst, it was intimated, was in part responsible for the wreck.
